ACES

By Bobby Wolff

Dummy's diamond king won, and South led a trump, capturing East's queen. After he cashed his diamond ace, he ruffed a diamond in dummy and led another trump hoping West would win. However, it was East who won, and he shifted to a low spade. The shift to either black suit was a given — East would not lead a diamond to offer a ruff and snuff. What South had to guess was whether East was more likely to underlead his ace or his queen. South hopped up with his king and lost to West's ace. The defenders then took two more black-suit tricks for one down. North's view was that if West had the club ace, there was small chance for success regardless of what happened in spades. Therefore, it was better to locate the club ace immediately. At trick two, South should boldly lead a low club to his king. When it wins, he cashes his trump and diamond aces and ruffs a diamond in dummy. A trump lead to East's king reveals that East was dealt the K-Q of trumps and the club ace. His original pass precludes possession of the spade ace, but he might have the queen. Taking his only reasonable chance, South then runs dummy's spade jack and makes his game, losing only two black aces and a trump trick.
